WIMAN'S CONFESSION

His Letter to R. G. Dun Put in Evidence Against Him.

Declares He Wrote It at "His Friend" MacFarland's Dictation.

The Lawyer Flatly Gives the Ex-Capitalist the Lie.

Spictators were on tiptoe to-day, in anticipation of the defense to be offered by Erastus Wiman in his trial on the charge of forgery, based on one of many like transactions as general manager, with an interest in the business, of the R. G. Dun & Co. mercantile agency. Joseph M. Fitzgerald, who sold paper to R. G. Dun & Co., was called as the first witness this morning. A check for bearing what purported to be his indorsement and that of E. Wiman, and the marks of the Clearing-House and Chemical National Bank, showing that it had been deposited to Mr. Wiman's account, was shown to Fitzgerald. He testified that he had never handled the check nor received the money, but he was not permitted to say whether he indorsed it or not.

mitted to say whether he indorsed it or not.

Ogden Brower, of the Campbell Printing Press Manufacturing Company, shown a check for $5.59. drawn by R. G. Dun & Co. in his favor Jan. 20, 1833, testified that he never received the check; that the endorsement of his name on it was not written by him, and he never received the money on it. It bore the second endorsement "E. Wiman," and the marks that traced it through the Clearing House to the account of Mr. Wiman in the Chemical National Bank.

There was another for $1,000 in favor of the Campbell Printing Press Company, which went the same course.

To Gen. Tracy, Mr. Brower said his firm received Mr. Wiman's individual notes for the amount of the indebtedness of R. G. Dun & Co. to them, the sum covered by these checks.

Cyrus H. Taylor recalled, identified the Wiman deposit check for $7,500 in the Central National Bank Feb. 24, 189.

This is to show that Mr. Wiman was

This is to show that Mr. Wiman was straining every nerve to bring his account up to $187,000, the amount he owed R G Dun & Co., and the implication is that the Fitzgerald, Brown and Campbell Printing Press checks were drawn for this purpose.

"Partner" Douglas Testifies.

Robert D. Douglas, one of the young men who have a 6 per cent, interest in the profits of R. G. Dun & Co., under the contract which gave Wiman 17 per cent., testified that he never knew of the existence in the cashier's drawer of Wiman's check of $125,000, and first learned of it when Mr. Dun dissolved the firm Feb. 21, 1893.

Mr. Douglas said he first saw the $5,000 Bullinger check Feb. 12, 1833, when he called at the Chemical Bank and asked to see the vouchers. Mr. Wiman had been away a week. He was called back, and returned Feb. 18. He had a long talk with MacFarland, attorney to R. G. Dun & Co.

Mr. Wiman's Confession.

At this point Mr. Wellman introduced e letter of alleged confession, written Erastus Wiman to R. G. Dun. Doug-identified it.

by Erastus Wiman to R. G. Dun. Douglas identified it.

Gen. Tracy objected to its being read, on the ground that the letter was written on the advice of counsel, a lawyer who was not only Mr. Wiman's counsel, but was counsel to R. G. Dun & Co. That it was written by Mr. Wiman on the promise that he would not be prosecuted.

"Mr. Wiman didn't know that he had done any wrons," said Gen. Tracy. "MacFarland told him that he had, and that the proper thing to do was to write this letter. MacFarland practically dictated it, and said that it would be all right and matters would be settled up." Gen. Tracy asked to be allowed to put witnesses on the stand to prove his assertion, and called Erastus Wiman.

Then Mr. Wellman objected. He said he should spend four hours cross-examining Wiman, and finally withdrew the "confession" for the present, which was all Gen. Tracy had been fighting for.

Mr. Boardman cross-examined Mr. Dougles He and Mr. all Gen. Trace had been nighting for.

Mr. Boardman cross-examined Mr.

Douglas. He asked him if he remembered hearing Mr. Dunn say in an interview with him that he would not help

Mr. Wiman out of his financial embar-

Tassment.

Douglas didn't remebber, and he didn't remember that he said to Boardman that day, "You are a friend of Mr. Wiman," and then showed this alleged forged $5,000 check and said:
"I show you this so you will not be a friend of Wiman any longer and will not help him out of his financial trouble."
"Do you remember saying at that interview that it would be the best thing if Wiman would get out of the country."

try?"
"I don't remember."

Pariner Douglas Excited.

'Do you mean to tell me that you do

Wiman. "You know Wallace W. MacFarlandhe was your friend?"
"I judged him to be my friend," said

Wiman.

His voice is clear and firm, but here its tone was sad. He identified the "confession," and said:

"Mr. McFarland told me if I would write such a letter it would compose our difficulties. He was my counsel, as well as counsel of the Company. He dictated the words of the letter. He certainly conveyed to me the impression that if I wrote that letter, as he indicated, there would be no prosecution. Had Assurances from MacFarland.

"I certainly would not have written such a letter but for such assurances from Mr. MacFarland."
"I ask that I may be allowed to suspend the cross-examination of Mr. Wiman till the defense submit their case," said Mr. Wellman.
"Oh, on the main question, certainly," said Gen, Tracy, in an off-hand, magnanimous fashion. "You needn't cross-axamine him except as to this letter."
But Mr. Wellman is no bird to be not vite chart, and he asked:

Gen. Tracy.

But Mr. Wellman was afterward assured that he should have a chance to cross-examins Wiman.

Then Lawyer MacFarland was called by M. Wellman. MacFarland is a compous, florid man, with white hair, cold-bound spectacles and a deep bass roice. He said:

Gives Wiman the Lie.

"I did not dictate a line of that letter, nor suggest a word in it. I did not see that letter till after it was received by Mr. Dun."

"Nelther dictated nor suggested a word," repeated Gen. Tracy.
"Neither," returned the witness.
"Was not the transfer of Mr. Wiman's Fox Hill, Staten Island, property to Mr. Dun for the purpose of protecting Mr. Dun and of repaying the amount owed by Mr. Wiman to Mr. Dun, and was it not done by your advice and with the understanding that Mr. Wiman would not be prosecuted?"
"No, sir, never that I know of."
Here Mr. Wellman read the "confession" in a clear, convincing tone, as follows:

Gen. Tracy moved that the first count of the indictment, charging forgery, be quashed, leaving the second count, charging the "uttering" of the forged paper, in the businesses of a mercantile agency for specific ends showed that it was a partnership, and that Wilman had full powers to draw paper and handle the agreement between Dun, Wiman, for the indictment, charging forgery, be quashed, leaving the second count, charging forgery, be quashed, leaving the second count, charging for Glassea, wicks and tallow for the 400,000 lamplons had already been bought by Mr. Olifers, and the people with whom he had contracted for the other parts of the lampions had been working night and day to turn them out.

Of course there was a great hustling to cancel orders, but Mr. Olifers was successful in getting rid of only 200,000 appropriation which would in "The Evening World," and when the Board boldly world," and when the Board boldly were over half of the fund from the pockets of the needy poor and put it in the pockets of contractors, the Board of Estimate thought it high time to deven when the still $10,856,50 due Mr. Olifers on the original order.

its inquiry to-day into the ill-doings the Police Department a sensational nor was current in the Court-House. It was to the effect that Ward Man John Hock, formerly of the Fifth street sta-Hock, formerly of the Pitth street sta-tion, had followed the example of ex-Boss Richard Croker, and placed himself beyond the Committee's jurisdiction. Senator Bradley, who was one of the first committeemen to arrive at the court-house this morning, brought the story of Hock's flight, and said that he had heard it on good authority.

Both Mr. Moss and Mr. Goff expressed great surprise, and said they had not heard anything of the ward me appearance.

A dozen witnesses had testified al-ready that they paid money to Hock-for protection in carrying on the liquid the liquid and running and running and running the liquid and running an pusiness without a license and rur

Among these were Mrs. Thurow, Mrs. Cohen and Mrs. Hensing, all of whom said they had paid "blood money" to him time afte to patrol duty last Novembe then sent by Judge Cowing to Elmira John Mallon, with interfering with his canvass for member of Assembly. Hock was transferred to the Mulberry street station, where he has since been patrol duty, Mallon v Kempner accused the men of intim ing merchants and saloon-keepers who favored Kempner's election.

The Police Captains' returns to Police Headquarters did not show that Hock had fied.

"If Hock was absent, with or without leave, the returns would show it," said inspector Williams. "No such report has yet been made."

An "Evening World" reporter found Hock at his home, 108 Seventh street, at I o'clock this afternoon. The exward man laughed heartily when informed of the rumor.

"I have no need to dread anything, and can be found at a moment's notice whenever the Lexow Committee shall need me," said he.

Nothing was said about Hock's disappearance, and the Chairman called upon Mr. Jerome to call his disappearance. Hock's disappearance, and the Chairman called upon Mr. Jerome to call his first witness.

Gus Kosmac, who is the manager of Dillon's saloon at Brosdway and Chasbers street, came forward and told the story of the row which occurred in the saloon night before last at 6.20, as told in "The-World." A big man named William Jackson, who was considerably under the influence of liquor, attacked a smaller man, and began to thump him.

A lively scuffle ensued, and Kosmac said he sent Patrick Gaffney, the porter, out for a policeman. Gaffney came back soon afterwards with a policeman of the Broadway squad, who arrested Jackson and he was taken to the station in Leonard street. Gaffney said he could not find on post the policeman whose name was William J. Redmond.

On the way to the station, Kosmac and Gaffney, who acrompanied the prisoner, met Redmond, and Jackson was turned over to him.

At the station Gaffney made a complaint against Redmond for not being on post.

Nothing, however, was done about this complaint at the station, but Redmond appeared to be very much enraged at Gaffney's interference.

Mr. Jerome then called Patrick Gaffney, the porter of the saloon, and he corroborated Mr. Kosmac in regard to the fight in the saloon, his going out to find a policeman and his complaint against Redmond at the station.

Gaffney went on to say that he went after the saloon was closed, that evening, to the corner of Church and Chambers streets, and was standing there when Policeman Redmond came up and asked him what he was looking at.
